PARSHAS VA'ERA

"Hashem spoke to Moshe and Aharon and commanded them regarding the Children of Israel and regarding Pharaoh, king of Egypt, to take the Children of Israel out of the land of Egypt." (Exodus 6:13)

In this verse, Hashem commands Moshe and Aharon to approach Pharaoh and demand that he free the Jewish people. Yet the Torah also states that Hashem "commanded them regarding the Children of Israel," without specifying what they were to command of the Jewish people. What, then, is this referring to?

The Jerusalem Talmud (Rosh Hashanah 3:5) offers a most puzzling answer. It explains that Hashem instructed Moshe and Aharon to command the Jewish people concerning the commandment of shiluach avadim—the obligation to free Jewish slaves on Yom Kippur of the Jubilee year (Leviticus 25:10). In other words, before demanding that Pharaoh free the Jewish people, Moshe and Aharon were to teach the Jewish people about their own responsibility to free slaves.

This raises an obvious question. At that moment, the Jewish people themselves were enslaved and did not own any slaves. Why, then, was it so important to teach this mitzvah at that time?

I believe that this is precisely the point the Torah is making. Because the Jewish people knew firsthand what it meant to be enslaved—the pain, the humiliation, the suffering—the Torah reminds them not to focus solely on their own anguish. Rather, they must allow that pain to sensitize them to the suffering of others.

A well-known story is told about Rabbi Eliyahu Chaim Meisels of Lodz, Poland. Each year, he would go door to door collecting funds to provide firewood for the poor. One bitterly cold winter night, he knocked on the door of a very wealthy but notoriously stingy man. The man opened the door and said, "Rabbi, come inside and let's talk."

But Rabbi Meisels insisted that they remain outside. Somewhat reluctantly, the man agreed. The rabbi began speaking about seemingly unrelated matters. Eventually, the man, who was only wearing a thin nightgown, grew impatient; his teeth began to chatter from the cold. Only then did Rabbi Meisels explain that he was collecting money to provide firewood for the poor.

The man agreed to give a handsome sum, but asked in frustration, "Why couldn't we have discussed this inside, in the warmth of my home?"

"Had I done so," replied Rabbi Meisels, "then you wouldn't have felt the pain of those who are cold all winter long—even inside the 'comfort of their own homes.'"

This is the lesson the Torah is teaching us, and the sensitivity it demands of us as Jews. Even in moments of our own pain, discomfort, and suffering, we cannot focus inward alone. Instead, we must allow our experiences to open our hearts to others—to feel their pain, and to do whatever we can to ease their burden.

Have a wonderful Shabbos!
